Mathematical finance, also known as quantitative finance, is a field of applied mathematics, concerned with mathematical modeling of financial markets. Generally, mathematical finance will derive and extend the mathematical or numerical models without necessarily establishing a link to financial theory, taking observed market prices as input. . Mathematical consistency is required, not ...

2. Noise. Noise is the presence of randomness in the objective function. In computational finance noise can easily be introduced when an objective function makes use of simulation methods and the random number generator is not seeded with the same seed for each objective function call. Large amounts of noise can 'confuse' gradient based and heuristic optimization algorithms whereas small ...
