The sociologist Arlie Hochschild provides the first definition of emotional labor, which is a form of emotion regulation that creates a publicly visible facial and bodily display within the workplace. The related term emotion work (also called "emotion management") refers to "these same acts done in a private context", such as within the private sphere of one's home or interactions with family ...

I had a bit of trouble getting it registered but once I got through the convoluted process it seems to work well in converting stuff. I think my request would be to make the registration process a bit less of a pain in the butt and to make your website a bit less convoluted as finding the info to get this properly set up was more time consuming than it needed to be.
